Essays on Drivers and Long-Term Impact of Migration

by
Merve Nezihe Özer

1. Risk attitude is a predictor of individuals' migration decisions and destination choices (Chapter 2).
2. Their curiosity and preference for variety drive individuals who are open to new experiences to more often migrate to countries that are culturally remote to their home countries (Chapter 3).
3. Cultural background shapes preferences for job attributes (Chapter 4).
4. Second-generation immigrants' employment prospects in their host countries are determined by their families' access to employment opportunities (Chapter 5).
5. Removing barriers to refugees' access to the labor market in their host countries would improve their labor market integration but also that of their children (Valorization addendum).
6. Economists' understanding of real-life economics benefits from the knowledge produced by other disciplines.
7. Economists should recall that succinct writing is an accomplishment.
8. Research funding policies can impede academic research to contribute to the solution of societal issues.
9. "Well, music has rests as well as notes." (~ Stefan Zweig, Confusion)
